Bryant Pond Woman

The following is a radio talk given by Mrs. Ralph Waldo Bucknam over KAMR, Los Angeles, Cal. Mrs. Bucknam before her marriage was the Mrs. Dudley of Bryant Pond. She is the daughter of the late Ansel Dudley of Bryant Pond. She has resided for over eighteen years in Hollywood, Cal. with her husband, a practicing physician and surgeon.

Mrs. Bucknam has won many honors in the city of her adoption. She is honorary president and one of the organizers of the Hollywood Opera Reading Club. She is honorary past president of the Schubert-Va-Wa Club. She has been first vice president of the California State Federation of Music Clubs, etc. She is co-hostess with Mrs. George Leach of the annual musical program in the Orpheum

The address along tax reducing lines follows:

I am happy tonight to be able to give this broadcast over KMTA under the auspices of the Tax Reduction Club, an organization, as I am convinced that this organization, with its fearless revelations of more facts regarding government expenditures and excessive taxation, will do more than all other factors combined to awaken the people to the necessity of intensifying their study and firm action to remedy conditions.

Owen Wister in his book on his friendship with Roosevelt, relates a conversation between himself, Roosevelt and Senator Lodge. The subject under discussion was the life of the republic. One of them, either Roosevelt or Lodge, thought that this country of ours was in a state of decay, that fifty or six hundred years, or other fifty or six hundred years, or other party did not openly discuss it.

The fall of Rome was due more to financial factors than to any other cause. Taxes upon many commodities, and especially such levies imposed by Napoleon on the French people were slowly, but surely, ruinspitting his downfall, long about a battle of Waterloo.

Since the beginning of the World War our country has gone wild, piling up debts and imposing taxes. The Government has increased at present thirteen to fourteen billion dollars a year and is six to seven times more than in 1912. And if the Government had not increased its income, the taxes today should be only one-fourth what they actually are. Thirteen billion dollars. What thirteen billion dollars is, is that it is two-thirds of all the wealth of the wealthiest city in the world, New York. Thirteen billion dollars is the same amount as the entire wealth of the State of California. It is equal to the wealth of the State of Massachusetts or New Jersey. It is more than the entire income of twenty-five million people who live on the farms of the United States.

Think of spending two-thirds of New York City in one year in taxes, almost the whole state of California the same and so on. How long can this continue? The per capita tax for California is $100 and the old is $100.

And this out of a per capita income which in 1932 would do well to exceed $400. A few years ago a prominent California public state official made the statement through the press, that the head of every family in California had to pay an amount equivalent to $750 a year. But conditions are worse today.

According to a recently issued estimate by the National Industrial Conference Board, the total income for 1950 was estimated in dollars. What the actual national income is today is anyone's guess. It is to be doubted that it is more than fifty billion dollars a year. If it is $10 billion dollars income, expenditures are fourteen billion dollars. These are taxes, fourteen billion dollars. These are expenditures. These include excessive appropriation for depression relief schemes of one kind or another.

How long can we keep up this thing broke? There are working four six days out of every month for the government! Far too much for any people necessary to run a kind of a government of thirteen or fourteen billions, of which the government has collected and spent by a vast hoic of These public officials are not increasing in numbers and are not increasing in wealth. The trend is downward. Unless the trend is checked, the number of us who are not working for the government or drawing pensions, will be in the poor house and the government will be of its own weight.

These public officials at every level are always voting first for their own interests. They will not organize unions. They are crushing the life blood out of the vast mass of unorganized majorities and toilers, who are struggling to live and get education and pay no taxes. And this vast mass of unorganized workers have no pension to look forward to. They have to stay in the news until the tax collector or creditor if perchance they can live that long can keep a job.

and taxes. The times now are desperate and the need is for drastic remedies. When this desperate situation was faced, President of the United States called the heads of the railroads and big corporations and labor leaders to Washington and exacted a promise that they would make no certain expenditures. Many of the same corporations and companies are now facing bankruptcy partly because of curtailing outlays. Is it the policy of government to leave them now in a lurch? Is the policy of this government to "Billions for Europe, but not one cent for Americans"? *

I am convinced that this organization, by its fearless revelations of government expenditures regarding government expenditures and excessive taxation, is doing more than all agencies combined to awaken the people to the necessity of intensive legislation for firm action to remedy conditions."

Once Wister in his book on his friend, the late Roosevelt, relates a conversation between himself, Roosevelt and Senator Charles McNary. The subject under discussion was the life of the republic. One of the things that Roosevelt or McNary, thought that the country of ours might last another five or six hundred years. The McNary did not openly disagree.

"The fall of Rome was due more to high taxes than any other factor. The excessive taxes imposed by Napoleon on the French people were slowly, but surely paving the way for his downfall, long before the fall of Waterloo."

Since the beginning of the World War, our country has gone wild, piling up debts and imposing taxes. The cost of government at present is thirteen to fourteen billion dollars a year and is six to seven billion dollars more than in 1912. And if the cost of government had increased since 1912, only as fast as our increase in wealth, our tax policy should be only one-fourth of what it actually is. Thirteen billion dollars is thirteen billion dollars.

It is worth noting that the wealth of the United States is almost as much as the entire wealth of the state of California. It is equal to the wealth of the state of Massachusetts or New Jersey. It is more than the entire income of twenty-two million people who live on the farms of the United States.

Think of spending two-thirds of New York state in one year for taxes, almost as much as the state of California the next year. How long can this continue?

The per capita tax for every man, woman and child is $100 to $150 per year. And this out of a per capita income which in 1932 will do well to exceed $400. A few years ago a prominent California public state official made the statement through the press, that the head of every family in California had to pay taxes equivalent to $25 a month. And conditions are worse today.

According to a recently issued estimate by the National Industrial Board, the national income for 1930 was seventy billion dollars. What the actual national income is today is anyone's guess. It is not doubted that it is much more than fifty billion dollars a year. Fifty billion dollars income, expenditures for taxes, fourteen billion dollars and this figure does not include extra expenditures for depression relief, relief of one kind or another.

How long can we keep it up before going broke? Think of working four to six days out of every month for the government. Far too much for any possible necessary services. And this vast sum of thirteen or fourteen billions, collected and spent by a vast horde of federal, state, county and city officials, probably represents the greatest waste of funds in the world.

Like clouds of locusts these public officials descend annually upon the harvests of the people and appropriate their wealth. These public officials are increasing in numbers and in new demands. Unless the trend is checked, all of us are not working for the government—drawing pensions, will be in the pay house and the government will fall of its own weight.

These public officials at every election are always voting first for their own interests. They, with other organized minorities, are crushing the life blood out of the vast mass of unorganized majority citizens, who are struggling to make a living and get enough ahead to pay their taxes. And this vast mass of unorganized workers have no pension to look forward to. They have to stay in the harvest until the age of seventy or eighty, if perchance they can live that long and keep a job.

No public official or pensioner should be allowed to vote. This vast army feeding at the public crib are always a unit for still further multiplying the tax payer. What private enterprise would run its business without going broke, the wasteful way we run our fire department? The double platform system, almost twice as many men as we actually need, are sitting them on pensions at a little over forty years of age, after twenty years of service, to be supported for the rest of their lives in part by the tax payers. What fools we tax payers are!

Hitherto, while the municipalities have been our worst offenders, the Federal government has been the best behaved of the wild army of tax collectors and disbursers. Considering that it was paying for its share of the greatest war in history, both in the way of debt service and a billion a year for veterans, the Federal government did remarkably well to keep its expenditures about level for the nine years following the war peak. But in 1930 the Federal expenditures began to mount rapidly, while national income was declining even more rapidly. Now every effort should be concentrated on Congress to keep down Federal expenditures and taxes. The times now are desperate and the need is for drastic remedies.

When this depression first started, the heads of the railroads and big corporations and labor leaders to Washington and executed a promise to reduce wages or curtail expenditures. Many of these same corporations and companies are now facing bankruptcy partly as the result of carrying out those promises. Is the government to leave them now in the lurch? Is the policy of this government to let foreigners, but not one cent for Americans?

The trouble with the President's salary maintenance program was that it was premature. Government economy should have come first. The time for action is now. Every fall in commodity and security prices ruins a fresh quota of citizens. A vicious circle is established; a fall in prices necessitates the calling of bank loans, calling the loans forces more liquidation and still lower prices. The new low prices forces the calling of still more bank loans and so on.

This cannot go on until all debts are liquidated because there is not money enough in the country or gold enough in the world to allow it. The life blood of the nation is slowly and surely being sapped. The country is slowly but surely drifting to destruction. Think of the poor farmer who raises strawberries, selling in the open market at five cents a box. Perhaps the producer gets one or two pennies of the box for planting, cultivating and picking the fruit. How can he buy a new car or a new suit of clothes? And the same with butter at twenty-two cents a pound and wheat around fifty cents a bushel.

A farmer having a mortgage of $1,000 on his farm finds his indebtedness doubled as measured in the value of the products from his land. And the same thing applies to all debtors who have borrowed on security. The dollars are worth much less value. Dear dollars are as disrupting as cheap dollars. It value should be stabilized. Do we lack the courage to tackle the problem? In time of war any nation does not hesitate to take emergency measures for its own protection. Every nation in time of war inflates its currency. The present situation is worse than war, with the exception of the sacrifice of human life, and it is more surely leading to destruction than the worst war conceivable. Why do we hesitate? Where is the man or the party that can lead us out of the wilderness?

At least one thing must be done—reduce government expenditures so as to entail a cut of a least thirty per cent in salaries and wages of employees with a commensurate of other costs, and pass back the excessive levies to the taxpayers. If an incidental measure may be decided upon as effective, such as inflation of the currency, an embargo on the exportation of gold, an emergency tariff to prevent the country being swamped with goods from foreign countries, the maintenance of the value of the dollar at par, and other possible acts of legislation.

A radical cut in expenditures is the first and most necessary measure, using the axe instead of the pruning knife. This is not so drastic as it seems despite the walls of protest from those who are and would be further affected.

Living expenses are away down, standards of living are not so exacting and expensive, and the average of recompense for all kinds of services is much lower owing to the money stringency. It would not be difficult, then, for public officials and employees, as private business executives and the ordinary wage earners have done, to reduce to the general level of today's conditions.

Every effort should be made to lessen the monstrous interest charges which government now pays for bonds and which property-owners have to meet on assessments based in addition to the regular taxes. For instance, the soldier's bonus should be paid off in some such way as the issuance of paper money to inflate the currency, protected by an order against the exportation of gold. The bonus is not paid and must be paid, and if it is wiped off we would save eighty millions a year in interest.

Then we should carefully scan and revise the pension list. This legalized racket, as Archibald Roosevelt calls it, badly needs an overhauling, as hundreds of millions in taxes would be saved if pensions could be reduced to the point where they are deserved and necessary.

It is a common report that we have a high cost of official drawing a pension of over $150 a month, and a prominent attorney and public official is getting a pension of over $100 a month. No matter what happened to men in the world war, if they are able to get out and work and compete with the average man at the average man's wage, they should not be entitled to such pensions.

"Pay for patriotism" is un-American; if a man is injured and incapacitated either by injury or illness sustained in war, he certainly merits our hearty support through pension. Otherwise, a pension paid where not needed or deserved is a heavy and unfair drain on taxpayers.

We simply must cut our costs to fit our ability to pay.

I'd Rather Read Poetry

By Henry Davis Nadig

Tempo of Music. Music is a magician here, and makes these rosewood cases into dusky brinks. Over deep evening-shadowed mountain lakes. Where, fathom-deep, the darkling hill-ranges hush.

Call this vast cover a steep-hanging mountain. Let alternating keys be day and night. And silver showers of sound be a fountain. A river in the shadow or the light.

Music restores, to you who miss and love them. Old meadows; when you sit in a garden. You dream the comely of June above them. And in a sudden breath the opening rose. You drift with Summer back into the wild. And while allegro lists, you are a child.

"The Road to Dowderry and Other Poems" by Margaret Widdemer is a large collection of poems written by Miss Widdemer during the past several years. It shows in many instances the poet's lyrical ability, her sensitivity and acuteness, her romantic realism.

The first group in this collection of eighty odd poems, headed by "The Road to Dowderry" is a romantic journey through England. In a racy, rhythmic mood she catches the essence of the romance of English landscape.

Two poems in the next section Half-gods, particularly impress me for their reality, their universality. These are "Streets" and "Real Things." The tragedy of loneliness and sorrow in the city is clearly and forcefully intoned in the former.

Streets. City streets are the best if you walk in sorrow; The sharp lights turn in their patterns; The cars flow through. Black and gleaming, flashing by as grieving; The image-like people jerk past, not remembering you.

No one flicks a curious hand at your heart-strings. Fingering, measuring what of truth is true. Nobody loves you enough here for watching, staring. The dark-faced-alien castler past, girl and boy.

You are too far from their lives to awake their caring. Your hurt is too far from their knowledge. No one will stop you from pacing till turn of morning. If you lift your face and walk swiftly as though toward joy.

City streets are the best when you hurry in sorrow. Tramp past the marching lights till they seem to stare. Bright, unpondering, down past the miles to meeting. Wear down your pain with the tire of the pavement's wear.

You are alone, lay your body where wheels slide over. Only the ones you belated will check or care. There is, too, along with a sense of appreciation and consolation in the eternity of nature, a touch of half-despair, half-regret in this other poem.

Real Things. So little a thing, We live awake. That few things matter—Tweeds, Content and still. We wind round hills. A grass-grown hill; Skies ignoring.

(So wide above!) Little hot things. Little despairs. Dusk coming freshly. With no one by. To dust your eye. Or move your ear. Bright blue water. Flashing to "snow" With high gulls sweeping. To curve back. Gold-violet sunset. Gold-rose, gold-green. Sliding to graves. And no change seen.

A white hand moving. Shrouded and still. Or moonlight snowing. On a black tree-trunk. Fish silver-swift. Through a clear brown lake. These things matter. Carry me—Oh, I. Not heartbreak.

I've read so many contemporary poets who seem to have the death complex, a fear and horror of it that they can't leave the thought alone but must work it over and over in their minds until they finally become so obsessed with it that it inevitably crops out to cast a shadow over the whole tone over all their poetry, that I am especially glad to see Miss Widdemer conclude her volume of poems with a cheerful note on that experience, an almost Browningian defiance of the grave. It certainly is worth quoting.

Last Barrier. And if death should come seeking?—What of death, my dear! Other things have come to me before. I shall be a little frightened, for I always fear the opening of each new door—But one side or the other there will come your voice, kind, slow. Telling me I can be brave; Your hand stretched out to carry me—Oh, I shall laugh, I know, And find myself across the grave!

USES GOOD GOOSE SENSE. The talk over the radio, by Thomas Dreier, on what he would do with the New Hampshire, the other night, pleased Mrs. Hatch of Goose Corner and prompts her in writing the following:

"The address like that and an occasional gorgeous musical program which keep the Goose from opening wide the front door and booting the Radio into the great open spaces. What with the ballyhoo for patent medicines, tooth paste and complexion cream, sandwiched in with Crooners and Uplifters, the Goose's cup of woe boils over."

"Right now she is contemplating a patch of her anatomy from which several layers of skin appear to be missing—all from the radio to the radio side. I solve never to hear again 'You didn't know the music and I didn't know the words.'"

"Colliding with furniture in a struggle not to step on one's ankles dashes devastating—extremely devastating—to the Goose and to the cats. There is something peculiarly weird and blood curdling about the profanity of an outraged cat."

"Do you wonder the Goose smashes into desks and cupboard doors if thereby she can avoid cats? Better missing hide than missing heart-beats. A stepped-on dog weeps and grooves, but a cat—how shockingly she does swear!"

Mrs. Martin Morrow and daughter Celeste and little son, Wendell, spent Tuesday of last week in Bolster's Mills with Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Gay.

LITERARY CONTEST

Each year the 13,000 odd members of the Three-Quarter Century Club look forward with interest to the announcement of the subject for the literary contest, which culminates just prior to the annual meeting. This year the subject has been suggested by the able and efficient president, Mr. Samuel F. Emerson of Skowhegan, who is ever ready with valuable ideas for the benefit of the club. The title which Mr. Emerson presents for the 1932 essays is most fitting, and opportunity bears on the present day problems with seasonable forthrightness. "What legislative and economical measures should be adopted for the best interests of the citizens of Maine? This will prove to be an engaging subject and all of the Three-Quarter Century Club members are invited to put into written form their ideas for conservation and economy. With the rich and varied experiences brought to their lives with the long years, with the memories of struggles through other periods of depression, with their power to look backward and their keen perception of future needs, these essays cannot help but be inspiring, interesting and beneficial.

All manuscripts must be sent to the office of the Maine Public Health Association, 256 Water street, Augusta, Me., on or before July 23rd, 1932. Three judges, well known throughout Maine for their literary ability, will then read them and decide which in their opinion is the best paper, and a prize will be presented to the winner at the annual meeting of the club, which will be held at the Skowhegan Fair Grounds on Tuesday, Aug. 2, 1932.

When the Fire Whistle Blows! Things begin to happen immediately. People rush out of doors; men and equipment start rushing to the scene of the fire; the fight is on!

A fire whistle is nothing but an advertisement, it serves as a medium to let the people know what is wanted—and it gets results! A good advertisement, properly worded and illustrated, serves the same purpose. It tells the people what you want them to know.

The subscribers of this paper are your customers; let the Advertiser take your show window to them—through good advertising!

CHAPTER I

Introduction

Harry Brandon, a New Englander, on attaining his majority, had gone to Colorado to make his fortune and having discovered with Charles Davenport, his new found and close friend there, of his age, a copper and silver mine in the mountains.

The young man after disposing of two thirds of his interests in it to a mining company for development, they found themselves wealthy at twenty-four.

Charles, having a taste for journalism, had invested in a newspaper plant in Denver, called "The Rocky Mountain News," while Harry, expecting sometime to go back to his old home at Comiston Falls, Connecticut, had kept the most of his money in the bank, and had purchased a few shares in the city which he felt confident would quickly appreciate in value as the place was growing fast.

Harry had come down from the mining camp one spring day to look after some matters after going to visit his father's office to have a little chat with him and look at a Hartford journal for any news from Comiston Falls.

The greetings over, he took up the newspaper he sought, and after glancing the columns he saw the following, which he read with great interest: "At Comiston Falls on the 4th inst., passed to the higher life, Mrs. Anne Canning, widow of the late James Canning, at age 82. She leaves an only child, daughter, Barbara, who is in the hospital; he is getting along nicely."

Mr. and Mrs. Linwood Harmon of Albany, N. Y., were Sunday guests of Mrs. E. M. Harmon.

Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Willard of South Portland and Mrs. Brainard Wentworth and sons were week end guests of their mother, Emma Gordon.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Holt of Massachusetts spent the 4th with their father, Orson Andrews.

Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Burroughs have been staying with their father, Alvin Bailey. His daughter, Elizabeth, is with him now; he is some better.

Mrs. N. W. Talbert of Great Barrington, Mass., is convalescing at Jennie Dyer's after a serious operation at the Post Graduate Hospital, New York.

Mrs. Nettie Merrill, who is working at Orson Andrews, was called to North Fryeburg by the sudden death of her brother, Lynn Meader.

There were twenty callers at L. S. Briggs', Sunday, most of them were from out of town.

Mr. and Mrs. James McAllister were guests of Mrs. Eva Hayford over the Fourth.

Mrs. Gusta Merrill returned home, Sunday, from a house in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Cummings, daughters Barbara and Ann, and Priscilla Parwell of Bethel, spent the week end at Silver Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Erion Burns and son of Poland were called to town Sunday.

Elwood Richardson is visiting his sister at Camden.

The Past Chiefs of Mismekoma Temple were entertained by Mrs. Elsie Dyer and Lucy Dyke at the home of Mrs. Dyke, Thursday, June 30. A social afternoon was spent. Plans were made for a picnic, July 14th. Delicious refreshments of sandwiches, cake, coffee, pickles and olives were served to supplement the plans.

There were Carrie French, Lena Chapman, Minnie Bennett, Hester Snodden, Alice Staples, Eva Hayford, Ada Hutchins, Selma McPherson, Adda Saunders, Mabel Worcester, Anna Grover, Blanche Worcester, also two invited guests, Jennie Dill and Nellie Holt, and our hostesses, Clarence Longfellow was in town over the week end.

Mr. Smith of New York is at his camp with his family for the month of July.

LET COWS MOW MORE GRASS, DAIRY EXPERT SUGGESTS

The old gray mare not only isn't what she used to be, but there are actually so few of her kind that the good hay market of bygone days is no more. Mow more grass, says the expert, and what is the land being used for that once grew all of this hay? R. F. Talbot, dairy specialist for the Extension Service, says that records for Maine do not show an increased number of cattle and other livestock to feed this hay to and that there are sufficient other crops being added to make up the difference.

With this situation in mind, Mr. Talbot believes that many Maine farmers would benefit by using of pasture hay fields for pasture. He said: "The majority of pastures, unless considerably overstocked, have abundant feed during the month of June and a part of July, but in August and September feed becomes short and of poor quality."

"One reason why pastures do not furnish better feed is because they are grazed continuously during the summer without the grain and hay crops. It is to store up food material in the root system. Alternating grazing helps to correct this difficulty."

"Many dairymen plant forage crops, such as oats and peas, Japanese clover, and other green feed to supplement pastures during the summer and fall. This method of cropping will still continue on many farms, but there are many others which could well consider taking in a portion of the hay field for pasture. Eliminating the labor of getting in forage crops and the money expended on these would go a long way toward improving the fertility of the fields converted into pasture."

"On many acres daisies and orange clover have replaced good hay; some farms have been abandoned; on others the type of agriculture has changed. It would seem evident from these facts there must be an opportunity for converting better land into pasture, land that is suitable to plow, that can be moved if necessary, is more easily fenced, and is more desirable for use in the rotation with other crop land."

"The area selected will probably be determined by the type of soil, its fertility, presence of desirable pasture grasses, and the amount of water available to the area, and the opportunity for alternating pastures. It is possible by using separate areas, fertilizing them and regulating grazing, to have good feed throughout a season of normal rainfall. The best soil for acidity, apply 1,000 lbs. of medium to slightly acid, apply 1,000 lbs. of lime. If strongly acid, apply 2,000 lbs. This should be adequate for about six years. The amount of fertilizer to use will vary with the condition of the field. From 500 to 800 lbs. of a complete fertilizer, 4-8-8, or a 5-8-7, applied once in three years will fit average conditions. The second and third year, 150 pounds of nitrate of soda, or its equivalent in the form of sulphate of ammonia, calcium nitrate, cyanamid, or other nitrate fertilizer will assist in hastening grass growth during the spring, as well as throughout the grazing period."

A guest may be as glad to go as the host is to have him go.

EAST WATERFORD

Miss Martha Upton

Miss Martha Upton died here, Saturday, at the home of Mrs. Ada Adams, with whom she had lived the past eight years. Miss Upton was a native of East Waterford, having been born October 6, 1858. Most of her early life was spent in Auburn and Portland. She was a great reader, keeping abreast of the times and was a delightful conversationalist. Her greatest pleasure was doing for others.

Surviving are two nieces, Miss Ethel and Miss Grace Corcoran of Lowell, Mass., whom she adopted when they were young and cared for devotedly, as well as several cousins in Waterford and Norway and a nephew and niece in California.

Dr. Joel B. Hayden of Hudson, Ohio, who spends the summers at East Stoneham, was the speaker, Thursday, at the funeral of Miss Upton, at the Universalist Church, Kivianis Club, at the Universalist Church. A delegation of Daughters of Veterans went to Oxford, Wednesday afternoon, to attend the funeral of Anson J. Holden, who was an obligated member of the Norway Tent.

Miss Rubia Sharon left for Auburn, Tuesday, to attend the American Institute of Normal Methods at Lassalle Seminary in a three week course. This will be her second season there.

Miss Rosina Sharon is visiting the Misses Olive and Margaret Michie in Providence, R. I.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore R. Frost, Miss Helen Richardson and Ralph Knight, North Waterford have returned from several days trip to Bar Harbor and vicinity. They had their headquarters at Ellsboro, where they were fishing at Bancroft, of Norway, who operate overnight camps there.

Dr. Frank L. McNeely of New York City was at Cedarbrook Farm for a day, Tuesday, being on his way to L. Ething, N. B. He enjoyed a day's fishing at Rangleway with V. Akers, the artist.

The fire department held a drill Wednesday evening at the Jellerson-Rafter Company shop for the ladder and hose demonstration. That started report of a serious fire on the top floor and brought a crowd of spectators to the scene.

WEST LOVELL

Mrs. George Guptill has begun work in the laundry for the girls' camps.

Wendell McAllister has his house full of boarders and his camps full.

The Stearns brothers bought a cow of Clarence Day of Chatham.

Charles Dickens and Bob Fagin

Charles Dickens and Bob Fagin

Charles Dickens, when about eleven years old, found work in a baking warehouse at Old Hungerford Stairs, overlooking the Thames river, in an unsavory part of London. His work there consisted in covering the pots of paste backing, first with a piece of oil paper and then with blue paper. After that he tied them with a string, clipped the paper neatly all-round and fastened a printed label to each pot of backing.

"You don't like it here over-much, do ye, now?" the boy who worked beside him said one day.

"No, I don't like it," was Charles' reply.

The boy—his name was Bob Fagin

Charles continued to paste his labels in silence.

Charles Dickens and Bob Fagin

Charles Dickens, when about eleven years old, found work in a blacking warehouse at Old Hungerford Street, overlooking the Thames river, in an unsavory part of London. His work consisted in covering the pots of paste blacking, first with a piece of oil paper and then with blue paper. After that he tied them with a string, clipped the paper neatly all-round and fastened a printed label to each pot of blacking.

"You don't like it here over-much, do you now?" the boy who worked beside him said one day.

"No, I don't like it," was Charles' reply.

The boy—his name was Bob Fagin—grinned and shrugged one shoulder; he was a large, heavily built boy with coarse features. "That's 'cause you're a gentleman," he remarked with a wink at Pol Green, one of the other boys who worked in the big warehouse. "You look pale, sort of. May be 'cause you're a gent, eh?"

Charles continued to paste his labels in silence.

All that Bob Fagin had said was true. Charles was not strong, and the work that he was doing only served to increase his ill health. He was also tormented by the thought of his father who was in a debtor's prison. He had spoken to no one about it; pride kept his lips shut on the subject. That was his secret.

Later in the day, just as he was applying a label to one of the pots, he noticed a startled cry and pressed his hand against his side.

"Hi!" cried Fagin, running to him.

"Here's a colic! The lad's in pain."

With some of the straw that covered the floor of the workroom he made a bed for his suffering comrade.

"Now, lad," said Fagin, "you're still weak, and you need help. If you should try to go home alone, you'd likely fall before you were halfway there. Tell me where you live and I'll go along with you. I'll see that you get safe home to your father, I will."

Charles felt a warm flush overspread his cheeks. Home! He had no home, only an attic room in a miserable lodging-house. If Bob Fagin accompanied him he would be sure to discover the truth: that his father was in Marshalsea prison!

"I feel better," he said at last.

"I'm sure I can reach home alone."

"And I say you can't!" the other repeated. "I guess I'm not going to let you start off alone!"

Charles' cheeks burned like fire.

There seemed to be no way out of it; he must permit Bob Fagin to accompany him. But he was still resolved that he should learn nothing.

Night was closing in when he and Fagin left the warehouse together. Up one street and down another they walked in the growing darkness.

"You live a long way off, don't you?" Fagin said at last.

Charles nodded. He did not tell his friend that they were merely walking aimlessly about the city.

Finally Charles stopped in front of a strange house. "Thanks!" he said in a nervous trembling voice. "I'm greatly obliged to you, Bob!" and he ran up the stairs of the house and rang the bell.

A servant came to the door and frowned down upon the boy. "What is it you want?" the servant demanded.

Charles glanced nervously over his shoulder; Bob Fagin had disappeared round the corner. He swallowed hard.

"Well?" inquired the servant irritably.

"Does—does Mr. Bob Fagin live here?" the question seemed to leap from the boy's lips, unbidden.

"No!" And the door closed with a bang.

Charles turned and quickly descended the steps, whence he made his way to his miserable little attic room. He had kept his secret!

AFTERNOON TEA AT PARIS HILL

Brae Inn at Paris Hill, was the scene of a delightful tea, Thursday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock. The hostesses were the Misses Lenice Cummings and Georgia Maxam.

The dining room was attractively decorated with roses and peonies. Dainty refreshments were served.

The guests were Isabelle Fleming, Eleanor Haskell, Julia Bumpus, Esther Deoster, Lydia Ross, Lucinda Pailley, Gertrude Titus, Dorothy Dean, Faith Thurlow, Helen Morton, Katherine Richman, Reta Shaw, Barbara Beede, Ruth Brown, Rana Judd, Kathryn Green, Greta Merrill, Mrs. Musa Taylor MacDougall, Mrs. Francis Swan, all of South Paris, Irene Newmyer, Newry, Eryl Cummings, Paris Hill, and Esther Caldwell, Oxford.

Charles Edwards

Charles Edwards died at his home on Cross street, South Paris, July 1, after a very short illness.

He was born in South Framingham, Mass., Feb. 28, 1857, the son of Alexander and Mary Batchelder Wiggins. The family moved to Paris when he was nine years of age. For years the family lived on a farm in the King neighborhood, but after the buildings were struck by lightning and burned, Charles, then the owner and occupant of the place, with his family, moved to South Paris village.

On Sept. 30, 1897, Mr. Edwards married Miss Lucie Andrews, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. America Andrews of North Paris.

He was a member of Paris Lodge, F. & A. M., of Mr. Allen Lodge, O. E. F., and of the family of Paris, P. of H., for more than fifty years. He was a member of Deering Memorial church and of the official board.

Mr. Edwards was for a number of years on the board of selectmen of the town of Paris.

He is survived by his wife and only daughter, Mrs. Isabelle Wiggins.

The funeral was held at 2 o'clock, Sunday afternoon, attended by Rev. C. L. Kimney, and in charge of Paris Lodge, F. & A. M. The bearers were H. H. Kimney, Ernest A. Beede, George F. Eastman and Alton L. Jacobs. Burial was in Paris Hill cemetery. Relatives from out of town attending were Miss Marion Andrews, Portland, Me., and Mrs. Arthur Koeller, Quincy, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Bradford Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mosher, John Stevens, all of Rumford; Mr. and Mrs. A. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Andrews, Velvich, Me.; Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Tucker, Yarmouth; Mr. and Mrs. George Jordan, Lewiston; and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Drett or Sanges, Mass.
